ABSTRACT

The objective of the study therefore is to examine the relationship between money ethics and tax evasion as well as investigating the moderating effect of religiousity (intrinsic and extrinsic), gender, understanding & knowledge of the tax system on this relationship. The results of the hierarchical regression analyses showed that money ethics was related to tax evasion. Additionally, intrinsic religiousity was also found to moderate the relationship between money ethics and tax evasion. However, the result indicated that extrinsic religiousity, gender, understanding & knowledge of the tax system was not a moderator in this relationship.
