ABSTRACT

This study investigates the influence of social media, particularly Twitter, on identity politics among Indonesian individuals in anticipation of the upcoming general election. Using Manuel Castells' theoretical framework, the study uses qualitative methodologies and content analysis to analyze Twitter accounts engaged in discussions about identity politics. The research aims to understand identity politics and its influence on the multicultural context of Indonesia. The results show a nuanced portrayal of public opinions and perspectives on identity politics, with endorsement or criticism of presidential candidates influenced by religion, ethnicity, and inclusivity. Support is given to politicians who support diversity and pluralism, while apprehension is expressed towards candidates with connections to radical and terrorist organizations. Sentiment analysis indicates a positive reaction towards avoiding entanglement in identity politics and evaluating it as a threat to cohesion and harmony. Several tweets also show a positive attitude towards identity politics, viewing diversity as a valuable asset. The study highlights the three primary candidates' history of engaging in identity politics, such as Anies Baswedan, Prabowo Subianto, and Ganjar Pranowo, who use identity politics as a tactic to gain support from Indonesian voters.

ABSTRAK

Penelitian ini menyelidiki pengaruh media sosial, khususnya Twitter, terhadap politik identitas di kalangan masyarakat Indonesia menjelang pemilu mendatang. Dengan menggunakan kerangka teori Manuel Castells, penelitian ini menggunakan metodologi kualitatif dan analisis konten untuk menganalisis akun Twitter yang terlibat dalam diskusi tentang politik identitas. Penelitian ini bertujuan untuk memahami politik identitas dan pengaruhnya terhadap konteks multikultural di Indonesia. Hasilnya menunjukkan gambaran opini dan perspektif masyarakat mengenai politik identitas yang beragam, dengan dukungan atau kritik terhadap calon presiden dipengaruhi oleh agama, etnis, dan inklusivitas. Dukungan diberikan kepada politisi yang mendukung keberagaman dan pluralisme, sedangkan apresiasi diberikan kepada kandidat yang memiliki koneksi ke organisasi radikal dan teroris. Analisis sentimen menunjukkan reaksi positif terhadap penghindaran keterikatan dalam politik identitas dan menilainya sebagai ancaman terhadap kohesi dan harmoni. Beberapa tweet juga menunjukkan sikap positif terhadap politik identitas dan memandang keberagaman sebagai aset berharga. Studi ini menyoroti sejarah keterlibatan tiga kandidat utama dalam politik identitas, seperti Anies Baswedan, Prabowo Subianto, dan Ganjar Pranowo, yang menggunakan politik identitas sebagai taktik untuk mendapatkan dukungan dari pemilih di Indonesia.
